Reclaim Your Body and Your Confidence

Dr. Tenley Lawton knows that the decision to have plastic surgery is one of the most personal choices a woman can make. “It can be hard for many women to reconcile the costs and the time involved with plastic surgery,” she says. “So I’m here to guide them with an open, honest approach.”

As a mom of two young children, Dr. Lawton has first hand knowledge on the impacts of childbirth and breastfeeding — not only on a woman’s body, but on her psyche, as well. “The gift of childbirth and becoming a mother is a gift that cannot be matched,” she says. “But undeniably, pregnancy takes its toll on the female body, and self-confidence can take a hit as a result, too. I’ve lived through this same experience, and this is why I’m so passionate about caring for my patients’ physical and emotional needs.”

It’s a passion, she says, that can’t be personally understood by many plastic surgeons. In the U.S., just one out of five plastic surgeons are women, and this means that most female patients wind up seeking care from someone who lacks a unique understanding of the highly individualized female experience.

“I don’t offer a one-size-fits-all approach,” she says. “I’m here to support and elevate my patients’ confidence, and everything I do is about recognizing each woman’s individual beauty.”
